CARD MONEY USED IN CANADA

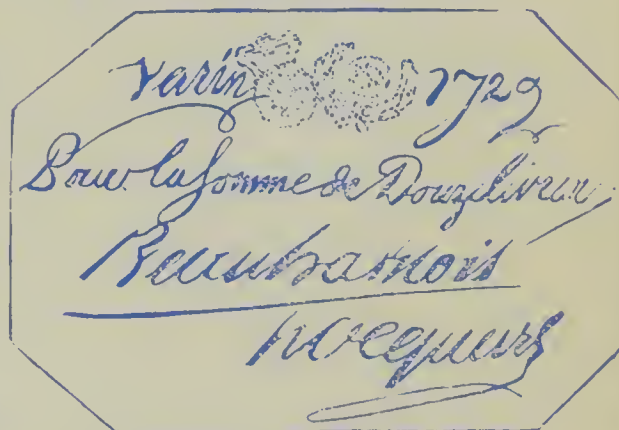

PRIOR TO THE CONQUEST IN 1760

About the year 1700 the Trade of Canada was in a very languishing condition, which was to a great extent caused by the frequent alterations which took place in the medium of Exchange.

The "Company of the West Indies" (to whom the French Islands had been conceded), was permitted to circulate there, small coins to the amount of 100,000 francs, but the use of this coin was prohibited in any other country.

Owing to the want of specie in Canada, a decree was published allowing this, and all other French coins to be used on augmentation of the value, one-fourth. At this period the Intendant of Canada experienced great trouble, not only in the payment of troops but also other expenses. On the first of January it was necessary to pay the officers and soldiers, and the funds remitted for that purpose from France, generally arrived too late.

To obviate this most urgent difficulty, the Intendant, with the sanction of the Council, issued notes instead of money, always observing the increase in value of the coin.

A "proces-verbal" was passed, and by virtue of an ordinance of the Governor General, and Intendant, there was stamped on each piece of this paper money (which was a card), its value, the signature of the Treasurer, an Impression of the Arms of France, and (on sealing wax) those of the Governor and Intendant. These were afterwards imprinted in France, with the same impressions as the current money of the Kingdom, and it was decreed that before the arrival in Canada of the vessels from France, a particular mark should be added to prevent the introduction of counterfeits.

This species of money did not long remain in circulation, and new cards were issued on which new impressions were engraved; those under the value of four livres were distinguished by a particular mark made by the Intendant, while he signed those of four livres upward to six livres, and all above this amount had, in addition, the signature of Governor General.

In the beginning of Autumn all these cards were brought to the Treasurer who gave their value in Bills of Exchange on the Treasurer General of the Marine, or his deputy at Rochefort. Such cards as were worn, or spoiled, were not used again but were burnt in accordance with an Act for that purpose.

While these Bills of Exchange were faithfully paid, the cards were preferred to specie, but when that punctuality was discontinued, they were no longer presented to the Treasurer, and the Intendant, (M. de Champigny) had much fruitless labor in trying to recall those which he had issued, and his successors were obliged to issue new cards every year until they became so multiplied that their value was annihilated and nobody would receive them.

In 1713, the inhabitants offered to lose one-half if the government would pay the other in specie. This offer was accepted, but was not carried into effect until 1717. But undeterred by past experience, the Colony again commenced the issue of paper (or card) money and in 1754 the amount was so large that the Government was compelled "to remit to some future time the payment of it;" and in 1759, payment of Bills of Exchange given for this money was wholly suspended.

When the Colony passed into the hands of Britain, that Government paid to the Canadians an indemnity of £112,000 in bonds, and £24,000 sterling in specie, which was at the rate of 55 percent, upon Bills of Ex-

NIPPONESE RUBBER FIRM GETS YEN TO STRETCH BANKNOTES ON PLASTIC

The Takasago Rubber Industry of Tokyo is trying to interest the government in printing its yen notes on plastic vinyl film.

They say vinyl would make much better banknotes than paper and that - perhaps - other countries could print their money on it too, if plastic yen is a success.

T. Yamamoto and J. Fujiwara, executives of the company, told a Japanese newspaper the Bank of Japan is impressed with the properties of vinyl and may make a decision soon.

The Bank of Japan, an official government organ, prints all of Japan's banknotes and mints its coins.

The company executives said plastic yen would be more attractive than paper money; it would be waterproof and it wouldn't be so apt to rip or tear.
